In defence of social work

In response to Education Secretary Michael Gove’s recent attacks on social workers as ‘too idealistic’ and over-focused on poverty and inequality as the source of their clients’ problems, the Social Work Action Network has produced an important new 48-page pamphlet In Defence of Social Work: Why Michael Gove is Wrong.

The pamphlet contains contributions from experienced practitioners, service users, leading social work academics and UNISON Social Care officer Helga Pile. The pamphlet will provide the basis for a series of meetings round the country aimed at challenging the Coalition government’s current scapegoating of people in poverty, the creeping privatisation of social work and reforms to social work education which would massively undermine the knowledge and ethical basis of the profession.

It can also be used within social work courses as a basis for discussion of the role of social work in a context of permanent austerity.

The pamphlet will be of interest to practising social workers, social work academics, social work students and also social work and social care union activists.
